UFood teams up with Dr. Oz

UFood Restaurant Group Inc., a Boston chain focused on serving food that is both healthful and fast, said it has created a cause marketing partnership with HealthCorps Inc., a New York-based nonprofit organization founded by celebrity sawbones and talk show host Mehmet Oz (shown at right in an AP file photo).

The program seeks to generate contributions to support the HealthCorps high school education program that provides "experiential learning in nutrition, physical activity, and mental strength" in roughly 40 high schools around the country, the company said in a press release.

"UFood is committed to offering a difference in how Americans of all ages make their food choices to help turn the tide on the obesity crisis that is adversely affecting young people in underserved communities," George Naddaff, chairman and chief executive of UFood Grill, said in a statement.

Naddaff may be best known as the early force behind the Boston Chicken/Boston Market chain.
